You need the right music to soundtrack the event. If hip-hop is your speed, then you want the right mix of warmth, nostalgia and surprise. Fire up the grill and turn up the music to this hip-hop BBQ playlist. Camp Lo's Uptown Saturday Night had no shortage of hot songs, but this is a sure go to when you're trying to add a piece of soul to the party. A great warm weather track from Raekwon's Only Built 4 Cuban Linx. Don't play this one at your BBQ if you plan on inviting your mom... unless, of course, she is a stalwart Wu-Tang. Summertime is, yes, the ultimate summer rap song. No summer/BBQ playlist list is complete without Will Smith and Jazzy Jeff smooth jams. This Tribe special has only gotten cuter since the 90s. Fire this one up to promote audience participation at your party. Can I fire it? Yes, you certainly can. Her neck smelled sweeter than a plate of yams with extra syrup, raping Big Boi at Spottieottiedopalicious. And this one is definitely sweet enough to evoke swoons and a tinge of nostalgia. Every BBQ playlist needs an element of surprise. Next Level is certainly one of those songs that will get people going, Oh yes, I haven't heard this in a while. Teddy Riley and 'nem swaggering over a flirty beat. Dr. Dre spat his most harmless rhymes ever. Ah, heyday when people said things like No diggity. What's not to love? With this masterfully composed party rap song, Biggie testifies to her imagination to kick it with some fly ladies and a T-Bone steak, while smoking in the Jacuzzi. Perfect for the slow, bump and grind segments of your party. When this comes up, watch out for the freaks. This is perfect for everything. Pool parties, BBQ parties, weddings, Bar Mitzvahs. All. But be careful – Int'l Players Anthem will get your guests to do their best Willie Hutch impression, I-i-i I chooose tells you, bae. Kanye West and T-Pain will take you to a place where life is good whether you broke or rich. One of the highlights from Yeezy's Graduation LP. The music video shows Ice Cube rolling through an unusually quiet day in South Central L.A. The song is exactly 4:20 in length. #coincidence? #methinksnot Not front as Nelly didn't have the game in a stranglehold for 8 months in a row. Country Grammar is a reminder of the era of rap-singing and left-eye plasters. Fantastic Voyage is one of Coolio's better songs not called Gangsta's Paradise. It's a fun song to bop to, or simply eat potato salad to. Sometimes you just need a little dash of hip-hop history to join your BBQ party. For that, simply go through the bones of the Rapper's Delight bravely in the past. A landmark song so historically important, it's preserved by the U.S. Library of Congress. A great story about meets a large large Song. When things get tough, just eat some beef ribs. A simple but powerful hit single from The Fugee's sophomore smash album. Before you know it, Fu-gee-la takes over your guests' bodies and get them to move to the rhythm. A pillow-covered jazz number from Q-Tips The Renaissance. This is also a great choice if your guests are new to hip-hop. Weekends were made for Michelob raps Digital Underground's Money B, echoing vintage beer jingle. Even if you don't give a damn about Michelob or weekend grilling, you'll still enjoy this track on any day of the week. Perfect for those sunny days when you want to kick back and remember about humble beginnings. Your idea of a party sitting in the carport, looking down the driveway and watching cars go by? It's okay, too. It's not exactly clear which grass they rap about, but who gives a flyin' paralyzed chicken? What's more relaxing than Sunday morning poetry set to the folkgrooviness of Bubba Sparxxx and Timbaland? Blue-eyed rap never sounded so soulful. In the spirit of Ice Cube's It was a good day, Scarface takes us on a journey through his hood in H-town, TX where everything is all fo sheezy. On My Block is ultimately about loyalty and friendship, which is what BBQ parties are all about. David Banner literally put Mississippi on his back. He tattooed his home state on his back and titled his first album Mississippi: The Album. Most people know Banner for like Like a Pimp, but tucked away in the middle of the same album is Cadillac at 22s, a stirring warning about the dangerous streets of Mississippi. A bonus track from good kid, m.A.A.d city, The Recipe finds Kendrick Lamar and Dr. Dre paying tribute to the triumvirate of West Coast tourist attractions: women, weed, and weather. The hip-hop/rap genre is one of the most popular categories of running music. The songs usually have a great beat and are very versatile, so they can be used for hard workouts and slow, easy runs. Be warned that some of these songs contain profanity or explicit lyrics. It is best to listen to them through headphones or earbuds. You can adjust the music level to suit you, especially if you bolt out miles on the treadmill. But if you're outdoors, you need to be able to hear what's going on around you as well. Queen Bey will make you want to push through that workout with her defiant Sorry from her smash hit album Lemonade. Once you're in the sharp slope of the treadmill, this slow but powerful track will push you over the top of the hill. The ultimate I can do whatever I want song will help you push the last few miles when you get ready to stop. What better mantra to keep you going? This one is not too weak in the heart; the pace is and do not give up. JGI/Jamie Grill/Blend Images/Getty Images With the words 'runnin, runnin', runnin' repeated many times within the first 30 seconds, this song is so perfect for running that it's also included in the power running songs list. It's guaranteed to get you pumped up for a run. This song is a fun one to run to. It's nice to hear someone sing, I love how you move to you while you drive. Right from the first verse, the lyrics of this song can be entirely related to running: 'Cause sometimes you feel tired, feel weak, and when you feel weak, you feel like you just want to give up. But you have to search within you, you have to find the inner strength... You may not want to drive until you collapse, but this song will definitely make you move. Everyone loves to dance to this song, but it has also got a good beat for running. This song has a nice slow and steady beat, so it's great for easy runs. Parts of the chorus can definitely be related to running (depending on how you feel!): This is ten percent luck, twenty percent skill, fifteen percent concentrated power will, five percent pleasure, fifty percent pain... This older song alternates between fast and slow pace, so it's a good one for an interval workout. Another favorite of the Black Eyed Peas, this energetic song is perfect if you really want to push yourself. This powerful song's slow pace and strong beat make it great for your warm-up or cool-down. This is a great song to get you pumped up for a big run or race. This song has a big beat that will keep you moving. Yes, this song is adapted from the classic '70s hit Stayin' Alive, but you may barely recognize it. If you're looking for a good running mantra, this song's Push it to the limit run can give you lots of inspiration. This song has a nice steady beat that is great for a warm-up or cool-down. This heart pumping track is perfect when you need some extra boost in the middle of your driving. This song has lyrics that are borrowed from one of Rocky's movies, so it must be inspiring, right? It's hard to hear this song and don't want to just keep moving.
